The decrease in family bondage and advancement of modern technology and resulting economic self dependence are responsible for the neglect of elderly citizens in every society. The problems that are usually associated with age are physical weakness and inability to perform physical activities or performing their own daily chores. Mental faculties grow weak; memory may become weak, learning and associated skills in some, become impotent.

P.T.O.

The ancient Hindu concept of family was built on the notion of collective duties and ideals of good life. Rigveda inspired marrying couples to unite in thought, duty and ideals through the bond of love and radiance of mutual company. Family property constituted the nucleus of the family's sustenance, economic development, spiritual sacrifice and welfare. Equality of a son's right to that of father signified continuation of fathers' life in that of the son's.[2] Today, the problem, is one of loneliness, helplessness and the feeling of being unwanted by society. The Old need company, love, affection and an environment where they can live with dignity and self-respect.

Due to influence of urbanization, modernization and westernization in the life style of even Indians there is a great threat to the unification of the family and to the joint family system. Adoption of western life style and culture lead stratification in the traditional family system in India. This has further lead to lack of economic contribution towards the family, dividing property among heirs is also responsible for the neglect of senior citizens. Parents today are considered a burden on the children; resulting in sending them to pay-rent homes so far called as Ashrams.
